DR. PHILLIPPA THIURI

Dr. Phillippa Thiuri was born and raised for most of her life in Nairobi, Kenya. After high school, Dr. Thiuri moved to the United States in the early 1990s to attend college. She spent 7 years in Massachusetts, attending Mount Holyoke College (Bachelors), Harvard University (Masters), and Boston College (Ph.D.). Dr. Thiuri's professional life has been spent furthering education around the world—from starting schools in post-apartheid South Africa, promoting literacy in Kenya and Haiti, and volunteering for local organizations like the Young Women's College Prep, Rochester Prep, and the Women's Foundation of Genesee Valley.

Dr. Thiuri has worked in higher education for the past 17 years in different capacities. She is currently a member of the faculty at RIT's College of Applied Science and Technology in the Department of Service Systems. Her research interests include leadership development, entrepreneurial innovation and service methodologies.

In addition to spending time with her family, Dr. Thiuri loves to share her perspective of the world through her blog—Pippa's Prism (pippasprism.com).
